

British Study Centres – learning English in the heart of London

My name is Toby and I'm currently doing an internship at British Study Centres, an English language school in the heart of London between Oxford Street and Baker Street. The position as an Academic Intern is vacant again from the 15th of April and the duration for the internship is 6 months – which ties in nicely with our semester dates.

As the Academic Intern I'm experiencing the two most important aspects of the school: the teaching side and the academic management side. Both parts are immensely interesting and the teaching aspect makes the internship especially worthwhile for students aiming to become EFL teachers.

I'm learning lots of new methods, approaches and techniques. Working with different teachers, helping with organising the daily routine of running the academic parts of the school and living in a metropolis like London really have broadened my horizons!

I greatly enjoy working with my colleagues and I'm having a wonderful time here at British Study Centres.

The school contributes to the cost of living in London by providing accommodation in one of their own student houses and paying for the monthly Travelcard to use public transport in London.

If you're interested in living and working in Europe's biggest city then direct your CV and letter of application to the Course Manager of British Study Centres London, Sarah Hayhurst: sarah.hayhurst@british-study.com

More information about the school can be found here: www.british-study.com

Or if you have any questions you can email me at s9tohipp@stud.uni-saarland.de