PhD-Position in humanities and social sciences, 3 years
(Media analysis and Sociology of art/literature)

The ERC Research Group “Minor Universality” based at the philosophical faculty of Saarland University (Germany) is inviting applications for a PhD position – Wissenschaftliche/r MitarbeiterIn – (3 years) starting at the latest on October 1st, 2020.

Saarland University is a campus university with international reputation for research excellence. Fostering young academic talent and creating ideal conditions for teaching and research are a core part of the university’s mission. As part of the “University of the Greater Region” (Germany, France, Luxemburg and Belgium), Saarland University enables students and staff to share and exchange knowledge and ideas between disciplines, between universities and across borders. With over 17,000 national and international students, studying more than a hundred different academic disciplines, Saarland University is a diverse and dynamic learning environment.

Reference number W1663, salary in accordance with the German TV-L salary scale¹, pay grade: E13, employment: 50 % of standard working time, duration: 3 years.

The ERC Research Group “Minor Universality”:
“Minor Universality: Narrative World Productions After Western Universalism” is a transdisciplinary research project funded by the European Research Council through a highly prestigious ERC Consolidator Grant. It offers an excellent academic environment both locally and through its worldwide cooperation network associating institutional partners from Berlin, Paris, Mexico, Tunis, and Hong Kong. The research group led by Professor Markus Messling wants to make a substantial contribution to the actual debate on the problem of universality after the era of Western universalism. If we live in times of a double relativistic signature – the necessary political and epistemic critique of Occidental Universalism, and diverse identitarian claims –, it is of prime importance to understand an emerging new global awareness that provides a background for the ethical and institutional standards of a world-society. But how can this new universality be addressed? Our research group takes a narratological approach to this issue, starting from the presupposition that narrations materialise in society according to political realities, and are capable of putting these into question. “Minor Universality” investigates how a new consciousness of universality is under way of being produced: How do contemporary cultural and social practices such as oral transmissions, narrations of the self and literatures, films, photography, and social media, self-organized spaces and cultural festivals, architectures and museums, open up local settings so as to create a new embodied awareness of humanity.

¹ TV-L = collective agreement on remuneration of public sector employees in the German Länder

Job requirements and responsibilities:
The ERC Research Group “Minor Universality” is looking for an outstanding doctoral student with strong interest in committed research and a high motivation to complete her/his thesis from a theory-based perspective within an transdisciplinary group dynamic. The successful candidate will have the opportunity to develop her/his own research project in the areas of media analysis and cultural sociology of art/literature dealing with contemporary literary/cultural festivals and how they stage themselves as cultural events of “global reach”. The candidate will question the cultural and political power of these festivals and scrutinize how they position themselves with respect to the question of a global awareness: Are they machines to create a “global” public space? Does their claim to be of “worldwide validity” mean more than creating a setting of authors, artists and intellectuals coming from all over the world – does it possibly reflect a praxis leaning towards a new universality? The doctoral candidate will not only analyse the marketing concepts of literary/cultural festivals and institutions with respect to their narrative dimension, but also implement a qualitative investigation building on interviews with the programme directors and organisers as well as with the invited authors, artists and intellectuals.

The funding from the European Research Council includes a full package covering travel allowance for field research and interviews, as well as the publication fee for the thesis. The PhD position does not entail mandatory teaching.

Your qualifications:
• Holding a MA or equivalent degree obtained with honours qualifying for doctoral studies in the field of humanities and/or social sciences
• Excellent command of English both spoken and written

Would be an appreciated asset:
• Good comprehension skills in German or French. If otherwise, the candidate should be willing to learn one of these languages during her/his stay. As language diversity is a key topic within the research group Minor Universality, we highly recommend the candidates to mention any skills they could have in other languages.
• Proficiency in qualitative social research and its methods

The Saarland University can also offer you:
• A flexible work schedule allowing you to balance work and family
• A broad range of further education and professional development programmes
• An occupational health management model with numerous attractive options, such as our university sports programme
• Supplementary pension scheme (RZVK)
• Discounted tickets on local public transport services (‘Jobticket’)

Applications are requested exclusively in electronic form quoting the reference number W1663 and are to be addressed in English, French or German by March 1st, 2020 to Prof. Dr. Markus Messling (minor.universality@uni-saarland.de).

One single PDF file including following documents:
• letter of motivation
• research proposal (max. 3 pages)
• copy of your academic degrees
• CV, with publication list if applicable
• letter of reference

Interviews will be held in April 2020. If you have any questions on the application process, please contact Dr. Hélène Thiérard (helene.thierard@uni-saarland.de).

For further information on the ERC-project Minor Universality, please visit our website: https://www.uni-saarland.de/lehrstuhl/messling/forschungere-projekt.html

In accordance with the objectives of its equal opportunities plan, Saarland University seeks to increase the proportion of women in this field. Qualified women candidates are therefore strongly encouraged to apply. Preferential consideration will be given to applications from disabled candidates of equal eligibility. The successful candidate has the option of choosing to work part-time in this position.

Pay grade classification is based on the particular details of the position held and the extent to which the applicant meets the requirements of the pay grade within the TV-L salary scale.

When you submit a job application to Saarland University you will be transmitting personal data. Please refer to our privacy notice for information on how we collect and process personal data in accordance with Art. 13 of the Datenschutz-Grundverordnung. By submitting your application you confirm that you have taken note of the information in the Saarland University privacy notice.