

Quote of the day:

"Now, not even the people who are the most spectacular recipients of the benefits of (...) prosperity are able to endure these benefits: they can neither understand them nor do without them, nor can they go beyond them. Above all, they cannot, or dare not, assess or imagine the price paid by their victims, or subjects, for this way of life, and so they cannot afford to know why the victims are revolting."

(James Baldwin, No Name in the Street, New York: Vintage 2007)

https://www.goodreads.com/book/show/256105.No_Name_in_the_Street